

Synopsis

This is a collection of essays and photographs that chronicles the growth of an individual's spiritual life. Through the author's personal journey of repentance, atonement, and rebirth, it illustrates that while the contemporary era may no longer idealize miracles, the real-life story of an atheist official in his prime converting to God serves as a testament to a series of divine interventions. This narrative offers a profound revelation to a society currently grappling with a lack of faith and an impending collapse of public ethics: the omnipresence of God's power and love will ultimately manifest in our lives. The narrative is rich with dramatic twists and turns, evoking deep emotions and prompting introspection. Simultaneously, the book delves into cultural shortcomings through everyday minutiae, offering a critical reflection on the nation and its culture, and articulating a central theme for the future: the revival of faith is essential for the revitalization of the Chinese nation and the prosperity of the country.

Author profile

Paul Zhang, a civil servant at an administrative agency, is over 60 years old and holds an associate degree. During his career, he has primarily engaged in work that involves interacting with individuals from marginalized communities, which has frequently exposed him to significant stress and a deep sense of helplessness. At the age of 40, however, he underwent a profound spiritual transformation, responding to what he perceives as a divine calling. This pivotal moment facilitated his transition from a life lacking faith to one centered on devotion to God, initiating a journey of personal redemption and rebirth. He aims to share his remarkable life experiences as evidence of the gospel of God, with the goal of glorifying God, benefiting others, and helping more individuals recognize the value of faith and embark on their own spiritual journeys.
